

We are all in this together.

In a year, when all of this is over and just a distant memory, we will all remember a time when mums and dads were at home, helping us with school work, taking us out on walks, sorting out our bedrooms and sitting down to watch films with us every night. We will all remember a time when health was everyone's top priority, people washed their hands consistently, took part in home workouts and figured out new ways to use the food in their cupboards. We will all remember a time when we had the chance to be creative, people redecorated their houses, used colouring as a way of passing time and thought of new ways to promote their small businesses. We will all remember a time when technology allowed us to stay in touch with those we love most, people face-timed their grandparents, their friends and even still took part in the weekly pub quiz. We will all remember a time when we couldn't have been without our NHS, doctors and nurses putting their lives at risk to help everyone for the greater good. We will all remember a time when the streets were quiet but our houses were bursting with love and laughter.

We will remember a time when we got to stop and be present.

We will remember a time of togetherness.

I know this is unsettling but where you can, focus on the positives, we are all in this together.
